Learning Objectives

- Engage in discussion of unique and universal reproductive health needs for homeless women
- Identify personal biases and blinders that may hinder optimal care for homeless women
- Consider the ethical undergirding for these issues and best practices
- Develop strategies to provide evidence-based patient-centered reproductive health care

Case Study #1

Chief Complaint: 27-year-old G2P0, with a history of using condoms and oral contraceptives, presents for a well woman exam as part of her residential recovery program.

Social History: A rural town HS graduate, she has a history of sexual and physical abuse in her childhood and moved to a large city to become a dancer. She began using alcohol and cocaine as "coping" mechanism which gradually moved into smoking crack cocaine. She recently began using heroin. Her addiction led to becoming homeless. At this visit she is 30 days clean for the first time since she was 18 and is stable in residential treatment.

Medical history: Her PMH is significant for Pelvic Inflammatory Disease. She has had two therapeutic abortions. She has been diagnosed with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder resulting from her history of abuse. She currently participates in a trauma informed women's recovery group where she received counseling for PTSD.

- What are your biggest concerns?
- What questions should be asked?

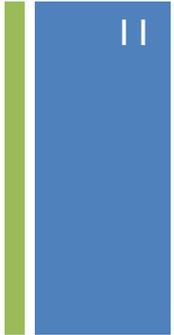

Keys to Reproductive Health Care for Homeless Women

- ACCESSIBLE (location, cost...)
- Non-judgmental
- Consistent
- Muti-disciplinary
- Client / Patient-focused
- Evidence-based
- Persistent
- Creative
- Others?

Case Study #2

A VA researcher is designing a study of infertility and family building preferences and practices of United States Veterans and would like to survey a representative sample of US Vets under the age of 45.

The easiest way to do this is to request a random sample of Veterans listed in VADIR and recruit and interview these Veterans by letter and phone.

- How representative will this sample be? Is that important?
- What might be a better way to accurately assess the Veteran population?

Keys to Health Services Research on Homeless Women

- Inclusive
- “Scientifically / medically complex” vs. “vulnerable”
- Multidisciplinary
- Participant-focused
- Consider: participatory action research (PAR)
